

Maintain Internet neutrality and Title II protections. If the Internet is like an information superhighway, then consider: An American who owns a car & license can drive on any road, whether that road is in her neighborhood or 3,000 miles away. Whether one has a fancy car or an old jalopy, provided your car is insured & maintained, all roads are open. Toll roads are marked and avoidable.

Have you seen Malcolm Gladwell's commentary on Canadian hockey player recruitment, and how Canada misses out on half the talent in the country by providing specialized training only to the biggest kids. as of an arbitrary date each year? Allowing ISPs to determine who 'the biggest kids' are does NOT promote innovation. It simply lines the pockets of the ISPs and a few others. All of America can see right through this.

I stand with the great majority of us to say: Maintain 'net neutrality.' Title II is meant for the protection of many against the abuses of the few. You would regret the consequences of implementing 'Restoring Internet Freedom,' Chairman Pai and Commissioners.
